Eating carrots is good for our eyes. A new study says grapes are also good. Having a few grapes each day can help our eyesight, especially when we get old. Buying grapes is no trouble at all, too. This study is good news for those people because they don't like carrots.

Lots of people join in the study. Half of them eat grapes every day, and the other half eat placebos. The people eat grapes and then they have strong muscles in the back of their eyes; we call it retina. The retina keeps our eyes from blue light. Blue light comes from computer screens and cellphone screens, and it can hurt our eyes. So, don't play with computers and cellphones too much.
